Health Officer Heidemarie Smith said the agency has received seven deer-related calls since Friday morning and that one deer has been euthanized due to unknown health issues. “Wildlife staff and emergency responders have been involved in working with sick and injured deer,” Smith said. “We are advising residents to stay away from deer and not touch them in any way. Wild animals are generally much more susceptible to disease.” Deer are not considered a threat to human health in general, but they can carry a number of deadly viruses. While most human infections are believed to be from eating or handling wild game meat, the government lists these as potential exposure pathways, regardless of where the game is obtained: Viruses spread through human contact with infected wildlife, either directly or by contamination of the environment. For more information on how to report deer illness or injury, contact the local health agency.Thieves steal $10M worth of fuel from Memphis Navy base Share this: This is an archived article and the information in the article may be outdated. The Navy says a load of fuel was stolen from their base at the Memphis Naval Air Station Saturday morning. The station takes in fuel that’s imported from throughout the United States and sells it to sailors who need fuel for their vehicles. The theft was discovered when the base reported that fuel hadn’t been pumped into their three fuel tanks during the day. The base says the thieves hit a fuel truck and took off. The truck was driven onto a runway and the
