National Rifle Association spokeswoman Dana Loesch on Wednesday blasted a national “meltdown” by anti-gun activists, called on those protesting at congressional offices to be politically active in their own districts, and said gun owners should not relinquish their Second Amendment rights for “extreme political purists.” “We have had an epic melt-down, not just a political meltdown in our country,” Loesch said Wednesday on “The Chris Plante Show” on ESPN radio. “People are mad — they are very, very mad about the situation in our country. They see it. ... This is the difference between a political rally and a political meltdown, and I want you to remember that.”

ADVERTISEMENT Loesch pointed to protests of outside of congressional offices and the Second Amendment-defending crowd’s call for changes to gun control legislation as examples of the “meltdown.” “When it comes to controlling the narrative, when it comes to that, we’ve been told that that is the right way to go, right,” Loesch said, criticizing pro-gun control protesters in Washington. Loesch claimed that others in the movement have “stopped reaching out to political leaders” and instead are shutting the American public out. “And it seems like, you know, let’s get real here, so many people in this country don't know who our leaders are and they aren't in touch with those leaders," she said. "That is a very dangerous move to stop working with people that are actually in power." "If this is the messaging that is going to get us on our way to repealing this, repealing that, continuing to fight this political war that never should've happened," Loesch added. "I don't think that's the answer." The NRA spokeswoman also dismissed the argument that the Second Amendment is sacred, calling it a "political movement."

ADVERTISEMENT "It is the political answer to the tyranny of those who don't believe in due process or the right to keep and bear arms. And it's okay. It's the worst thing that could happen to our country because of the political radicals that have come into our political What's New in the Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0.2)?

1. Technical Field This invention relates to a pre-clamp apparatus which, when used in conjunction with a co-extrusion process, provides for secure and easy connection of an elongated polymer string between two or more apparatus such as two strands in a mixing head, a stationary spool or the like. More specifically, this invention provides an apparatus which is easy to use and is reliable in maintaining a desired seal between the ends of the strings to be connected. 2.

Description of the Prior Art A variety of devices are known in the art which provide a clamping means for the securement of two or more strands of extruded polymer material. These clamps are conventionally used in co-extrusion systems to properly orient, align and intermesh two or more strands of polymer to form a composite string of material. In the current art, two different techniques are frequently utilized. One method is used in cold flow, impingement or mixing heads, wherein a solidifying polymer is extruded through a passageway and a turbulent mixing chamber. The turbulence is sufficient to free the extrudate from the passageway. The mixing chamber may be rotated through the extrudate to properly distribute its attributes over the entire cross-section of the head. The head is provided with a passage along which one or more polymer strands are passed to traverse the mixing chamber. The chamber and the passageway, normally formed of stainless steel, are provided with a plurality of holes through which extrudate is pumped. The velocity of the extrudate is sufficiently reduced that the polymer strands tend to set (solidify) and adhere to the steel mixing chamber. This adhesion is enhanced because the mixing chamber is normally spinning at or near its operating speed. A known problem with this type of system is that the polymer strands tend to adhere to the chamber and it is difficult to remove strands without breaking one or more of them. Because of this, the cross-section of the chamber must be sufficient to allow the strands to drop through the chamber under their own weight. This means that the chamber must be significantly larger than if the strands were allowed to freely fall through. Another problem with existing techniques is that when the polymer material solidifies, it develops a significant amount of torque in the chamber and is very difficult to remove. This torque may be sufficient to damage a mixing head by warping it or by rendering it useless. In the current art, other techniques for mixing polymer strands utilize a stationary mix chamber
