Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a battery holder device, and more particularly to a battery holder device for a portable electronic device. 2. Description of Related Art With the advance of technology, portable electronic devices, such as mobile phones and personal digital assistants (PDAs), have become indispensable tools for people in their daily life. Common portable electronic devices include a rechargeable power source known as a rechargeable battery pack, such as a lithium ion (Li-ion) battery or a rechargeable battery. In order to ensure the usage of a portable electronic device, the battery pack is removably attached to a portable electronic device by a battery holder. A conventional battery holder is mounted on a portable electronic device by a screw structure. Specifically, the conventional battery holder includes an inserting device, and the inserting device is extended through a hole of a casing of the portable electronic device for firmly mounting the battery holder on the portable electronic device. However, this way of mounting the battery holder is time-consuming, and the screw structure may not exactly mount the battery holder to the portable electronic device. In addition, the screw structure may affect an appearance of the portable electronic device, and increasing probability for failure of the battery pack. What is needed, therefore, is a battery holder device for a portable electronic device which can simplify the process of mounting the battery holder on the portable electronic device, and improve the reliability.This copy is for your personal non-commercial use only. I'm in the process of learning PySide/Qt at the moment, and I've hit a brick wall with the following: I have several QObjects in a QTreeWidget, and each of them each have a set of QActions associated with them. I need to be able to interact with one of the QActions depending on which object the QTreeWidget is displaying (by using a pointer to that QTreeWidget). How can I do this? A: There's a signal/slot relationship with each action's QAction, so you could connect that to a function with a QString parameter, and call it from there. You can see an example of that concept here. A: Turn the action into a QAction and use the subclass functionality to map the action to a QObject. I imagine there's some other way, but this is the way I see it. A: There is no direct way, but you may wrap the QAction into a custom class with QSignalMapper and use

QMetaObject.invokeMethod to call the methods of the QActions. This is a very basic example class

QActionProxy(QObject): # subclass in not need here # or if you want to avoid the creation of a object in memory def __init__(self, *args, kw): super(QActionProxy, self).__init__(*args, kw) self.mapper = QSignalMapper(self) def trigger_action(self, *args): self.mapper.setMapping(self, args) index = self.mapper.mappedPosition
