12 Tales of Lone Wolf &…FreeA fast DNA extraction protocol for bacteria and planctomycetes from a variety of environmental samples. A new polymerase chain reaction (PCR)-based method for the isolation of DNA from bacteria and non-culturable planctomycetes is described. The method utilizes alkylated-primers in conjunction with a chemical DNA extraction procedure, and does not require the laborious internal organization of multiple steps, as occurs with most published microbial DNA extractions. The method also eliminates bias from PCR amplification inhibitors. When exposed to sub-millimolar concentrations of EDTA, Gram-positive bacteria are lysed into a heterogeneous mixture, making their separation more difficult. Planctomycetes are more resistant to lysis, apparently due to their waxy surface. Under standard circumstances, the yield of planctomycete DNA can exceed that of Gram-positive bacteria. However, the yield can be increased by pretreatment with alkylated-primers to yield effective template for PCR. The yield of DNA produced by this protocol was equivalent to that of a published method with similar optimization conditions.Chlorhexidine locks for control of fever in burned children. Burned children in the acute care unit and the pediatric intensive care unit were randomized to receive either a standardized dressing and chlorhexidine-containing alcohol/acetate (chlorhexidine) or a standardized dressing alone (sterile saline) once daily at bed rest for a minimum of 21 days. Fever was an end point, and randomization was stratified on date of burn. There were 40 children (15% of the burns nursed; 4/28 (14%) required the ICU). Burn sites accounted for 38% of the burns. The incidence of fever was not significantly lower (50%) in the chlorhexidine group (95% confidence interval, 25%-75%) than the saline group (57%) (95% confidence interval, 35%-77%). There was no significant difference in two-day duration or cumulative incidence of fever between groups. Incidence of superinfections was comparable (13% saline vs 12% chlorhexidine, $P >$ or $= 0.75$). Rates of skin and soft tissue infections were comparable between the chlorhexidine and saline groups, but burn wound infection rates were lower with chlorhexidine, and necrotizing fasciitis was not seen. The most common cause of superficial necrotizing fasciitis was group A stre

Q: Rails ActiveRecord "0" scope I have a query that selects all users that have a status of "enabled", sorted by when they were created (latest to oldest). The query looks like this: User.all.order('created_at DESC').where(status: 'enabled') Now my question is, how can I get the number of users that are in this scope, using ActiveRecord? I was thinking of adding a counter, but I could not figure out how to do this in the scope. Is this possible and if so, how? A: The User.where is considered an ActiveRecord::Relation, and I would suggest if you need all_values, join then count: User.all.select('count()').joins(:status).where(:status => 'enabled') # => SELECT "users". FROM "users" # LEFT OUTER JOIN "statuses" ON "users"."id" = "statuses"."user_id" # WHERE "statuses"."status" = 'enabled' user = User.where(:status => 'enabled') user.count # => 1 UPDATE The.count works in this situation (I just tested) but the ActiveRecord should still work in your case as well. 3D printing has been making headlines for years. It has finally come to Europe where the first 3D printer, Replicator Mini, was launched in Belgium in November 2015. In short, it is a 3D printing machine that can print in several materials, from plastics to metals to ceramics. 3D printing has been around since the 1980s, but this new technology promises to make everything better, faster and cheaper. This is because 3D printing technology can use existing raw material to produce, or generate, new 3D objects or as designer explained, things that you "a can't do anywhere else." There are also different 3D printing devices that you can use for different purposes. Ad Types of 3D printing technology 3D printing technology can be classified into five main categories: vat photopolymerization, powder based, melted plastic, fused filament fabrication, and selective laser sintering. Vat photopolymerization involves
